Las Cruces a Hamlet.

"I first came to El Paso in 1835, expecting to meet a sister who was coming east, having been in the orient. She was slow in arriving no I waited and took in the town. Than I went to the Mescalero reservation and practiced. In 1830 I came back and located. At that time El Paso had about 18,000 yeeple. Las Cruces was a hamlet, Alamoscorlo was not on the map, nor was Carlshnd. Roswell was a village and Carricoza was nothing. Pecos was a hamlet, while Marfa, Alpine and Valentine were more fly specks. In the valley were only, the settlements of Yaich and San Elimito. And what a change has occurred since then? has occurred since then.
Mining Center.

"Some may dimute the contention but I feel confident that not one-fourth of the mining possibilities in a radius at 200 miles of El Paso have even been acratched. Each summer I me out into the unsettled regions and I am amaged before the immensity of all this territory that is eventually El Paso's trade possession.

"I believed in the city and I stayed, and now that I am on in years it is gratifying to know that everything I thought then has come true. Not only did I see the presidilities of the Mescalero reservation as a national park but, 20 years, ago, wrote the first letter to the preum advocating the creating of a national park up there and now it is going to be done."
